Order of Priority, from greatest to least

7-day Journal (8c)

Sunday: The first half of Sunday went well and followed the general line outline. However, because I felt that language arts was in more need of work, I cut math test study time in half and worked off the other line in the library.

Monday: As with Sunday the first half of the day was normal (you are required to go to school). However, due to the previous line, I met with my science group to finish the last details and stopped swimming as a result.

Tuesday: Day was completely normal and followed schedule.

Wednesday: Discussed project and test scores and compared them with friend's. 10 minutes late coming home and substituted free time before hypothetical swim practice as a result. I had an unprepared swimmer conference and had to skip swim practice - slept 20 minutes later.

Thursday: Ate lunch with friends, so I ended up taking an extra 20 minutes walking back and forth from home to library. Also needed to transport science project home, taking an extra 5 minutes, adding up to a total of 25 minutes substituted from free time (before swim practice).

Friday: Followed schedule until night when I realized that we were going on a last-minute trip to Yosemite. Packed luggage for 30 minutes (3:30-4:00 PM) and left for a 4 day vacation at 7:00 PM.

Saturday: So much for the "no plans" →

Improvements (8d)

The schedule that was created was somewhat inconsistent. This could have been a result of the numerous projects and activities (since it was the last week of school). Despite this, it is undeniable that more in-depth planning will need to take place, and a calendar similar to this should be used on more "normal" weeks. In the future, confirmations and preparations should be taken to ensure that the calendar does not become merely a "vague idea of the day".
